Italian airs which she had given in Boston at the concerts of January 3 and 4. They were first recital in Acolan Hail. By one of those coincidences which happen every season yet never cease to amaze the innocent recorders of musical domas she played the very same sonata that Tina Lerner had played on Monday. It is Schumann's F sharp minor sonata, and it has survived the performances of many planists from many parts of the world. It will doubtless continue to be a beautiful sonata despite the fact that in one week it was interpreted in both Russian and Germaine Schnitzer, an Austrian plan-had some poetic moods to enrich it and to uplift the spirits of the hearers. There was much lovely color in the player's treatment of the slow movement and no cheap sentiment. It was sound art and deserved warm applause, which it received.

There are no important reasons why a musician of to-day should not take up the concert for "several instruments" as incisiveness and she has gained in as-surance and repose since she last visited trary, there are good reas ons why in thesus.
